Among the major projects launched was the PM MITRA Kakatiya Mega Textile Park in Warangal, being projected as India's first fully operational PM MITRA textile park. Spread across over 1,300 acres, the integrated textile hub is expected to strengthen the textile manufacturing ecosystem and generate large-scale employment opportunities.

Other projects included the development of the Zaheerabad industrial and smart city area, four-laning works on NH-167 under the Hyderabad-Panaji Economic Corridor, railway multi-tracking works on the Kazipet-Vijayawada section, a rail under bypass project at Kazipet and a petroleum, oil and lubricants terminal at Malkapur.

Addressing the gathering, A. Revanth Reddy described the programme as a "development festival" and stressed the importance of cooperation between the Centre and the state for Telangana's long-term economic growth.

The Chief Minister said Telangana's development vision under "Telangana Rising 2047" aligns with the national goal of "Viksit Bharat 2047." He reiterated the state government's targets of building a $1 trillion economy by 2034 and a $3 trillion economy by 2047.

He also sought greater central support for key infrastructure proposals including the Musi River rejuvenation project, Hyderabad Metro Rail expansion, radial roads and the proposed Hyderabad-Machilipatnam 12-lane highway.

During his speech, Narendra Modi assured continued support for Telangana's development and highlighted the Centre's increased allocation for railway infrastructure in the state.

The Prime Minister also stressed the importance of infrastructure-led growth, renewable energy expansion and reduced dependence on imported petroleum products. He said India is moving ahead rapidly through reforms and modern infrastructure development.

Union Minister G. Kishan Reddy said the projects launched during the visit would significantly boost Telangana's industrial growth, logistics network and employment generation.

The event highlighted ongoing Centre-State collaboration in sectors including textiles, transport, railways, energy and industrial infrastructure as part of broader economic development initiatives in Telangana.

Chennai : Newly sworn-in Tamil Nadu Chief Minister C. Joseph Vijay on Sunday signed his first set of official orders within hours of assuming office, announcing measures related to free electricity, women's safety and anti-drug enforcement.

response systems and strengthening protection measures for women across the state.

In another major decision, the government announced the establishment of a statewide anti-narcotics task force, including dedicated units and police stations in districts and urban centres to intensify action against drug trafficking and substance abuse.

Officials said the measures were intended to address public welfare concerns and strengthen law-and-order enforcement, particularly with a focus on youth protection. C. Joseph Vijay also stated that his government would release a white paper on the financial condition inherited from the previous administration and reiterated his commitment to transparent and accountable governance.

The swift announcements are being viewed as an effort by the Tamil Nadu government to demonstrate immediate implementation of key electoral promises after securing power in the Assembly elections.

While supporters welcomed the decisions as people-centric measures, some political observers and economists raised concerns regarding the long-term fiscal implications of welfare commitments amid the state's existing financial liabilities.

Further operational guidelines and government orders regarding implementation of the schemes are expected to be issued by the Tamil Nadu government in the coming days.

Public Health in the Shadows of Corporatization - Is Healthcare Becoming a Luxury for the Common Man?

(Capital Information)
Hyderabad : The concept of a welfare state in a democracy like India rests on two vital pillars: education and healthcare. Under the right to life guaranteed by the Constitution, access to quality healthcare is a fundamental right of every citizen. However, current trends in the national and state medical landscape suggest that this right is increasingly becoming a privilege reserved for the wealthy.

The Stance of Government Leadership: A Concerning Signal

On one hand, the Prime Minister, and on the other, various Chief Ministers, are frequently seen inaugurating corporate hospitals, presenting them as symbols of progress. When the heads of state promote the private medical sector so extensively, how can the common man maintain faith in public health institutions? It is becoming evident that the failure to strengthen public healthcare stems from a shift in the priorities of our policymakers.

The Bitter Truth Behind Corporatization
 A lack of infrastructure and chronic staff shortages in government hospitals force the common man to turn to private facilities, even against his will. With approximately 60% to 80% of India's (Cont. on Pg 2)

City boys' world record in martial arts

(Capital Information)

Hyderabad : For the 14-year-old Balabhadrapatruni Yashwanth from the City, a martial arts exponent, it was a dream come true when his two individual feats involving speed-based striking techniques, earned him a unique world record.

In March 2026, Yashwanth recorded 161 full-extension punches in 30 seconds while wearing boxing gloves and 107 full-extension punches in 20 seconds while wearing karate gloves.

Yashwanth, a 10th standard student of Pallavi School and mentored by Shaswat Kumar, performed the feat in March this year and he is affiliated with the Senkoukai Karate organization.

The young talent's rare performance has been recognised by the Asian Book of World Records for performances involving speed-based striking techniques.

In May 2026, he received an additional recognition from the Asian Book of World Records for completing 108 single-hand full-extension wall punches within 30 seconds, again verified under the supervision of Shaswat Kumar.

Public Health in the Shadows of Corporatization - Is Healthcare Becoming a Luxury for the Common Man?

(Cont. from Pg 1) population living in poverty, the cost of a single visit to a corporate hospital is pushing middle-class and poor families into a cycle of permanent debt. Once viewed as a service, healthcare has transformed into a sector driven purely by profit. Much like the private education sector, the migration of medical services into the hands of corporate giants is damaging social equity.

To Whom Do the Fruits of Independence Belong?

India fought for independence to ensure that the poor would have access to basic necessities, including education and health. The shift of these essential services toward privatization contradicts the very ideals of the Constitution. If governments act as "brand ambassadors" for the private sector, who is left to address the grievances of the ordinary citizen?

Conclusion

True development in the healthcare sector is not measured by massive buildings or sophisticated machinery, but by whether the poorest individual can receive quality treatment at a government hospital without a single rupee of expense. Policymakers must move beyond their fascination with corporate healthcare and commit to restoring the integrity of the public health system. Otherwise, saving a life will become an unbearable burden for the common man, leaving the future of the nation in question.

Busy Lives, Empty Homes: Why Family Time Must Become a National Priority

(Mahesh Merupula)

(Capital Information)

Tirupati : A Growth Story We Are Not Talking About: India's progress is often measured in numbers—GDP growth, rising incomes, expanding cities. But there is another story unfolding quietly inside homes. It does not appear in economic reports, yet it shapes the future of society in a far deeper way. The modern Indian household is functioning efficiently. But emotionally, it is under strain.

The Two-Income Reality: For most families today, having both parents work is not a choice—it is a necessity. Rising living costs, education expenses, and aspirations have made dual incomes essential. On the surface, everything looks stable. Bills are paid, routines are maintained, and responsibilities are managed. But stability on paper does not always mean stability at home.

The Hidden Cost: Time and Energy: What often goes unnoticed is the cost at which this system operates. Long work hours, demanding schedules, and exhausting commutes leave parents with limited emotional energy. They are physically present, but mentally drained. Conversations become shorter. Interactions become task-focused. The warmth that once defined home life slowly gives way to efficiency. This is not a lack of care—it is a lack of capacity.

Children Feel What Isn't Said: Children may not always express it, but they experience the shift. When time is limited and attention is divided, emotional connection weakens. Family conversations turn into instructions. Guidance becomes hurried. Screens begin to replace meaningful engagement. Over time, a quiet emotional distance develops—not because families don't value connection, but because they struggle to sustain it.

From Homes to Survival Zones: Homes are meant to offer calm, connection, and comfort. Increasingly, they are becoming spaces of recovery after long, demanding days. Mornings are rushed. Evenings are tired. Nights are often spent in silence or on devices. Stress replaces calm, and patience gives way to irritation. The home continues to function—but it no longer feels the same.

A Personal Problem or a Public Issue? Despite its widespread nature, this challenge is often treated as a private matter. Families are expected to "manage better," to find balance within systems that leave little room for it. At the same time, political narratives frequently highlight "happiness," "family welfare," and "quality of life." Yet these ideas rarely translate into policies that directly support family time and emotional well-being. If happiness is truly a national priority, this gap cannot be ignored.

What Other Countries Are Doing Differently: Several countries have already recognized that family well-being is not separate from national development—it is central to it. Nations like Finland, Sweden, and Norway have built systems that actively support family life. Their policies include regulated work hours, flexible employment structures, shared parental leave, and accessible childcare.

The outcomes are clear. These countries consistently report higher levels of happiness, lower parental stress, and stronger social cohesion.

Importantly, they demonstrate that when families are supported, productivity and stability improve as well.

India's Structural Challenge: In India, the system often works in the opposite direction. Long working hours are common. Work frequently extends beyond office time. Commutes consume valuable hours. Flexibility is inconsistent and often dependent on individual employers rather than policy frameworks. The result is a growing imbalance between professional demands and personal life. This is not just a lifestyle issue it is a structural one.

Why Policy Must Step In? If policymakers are serious about improving quality of life, family well-being must move from rhetoric to action. Work-hour limits need to be enforced more strictly. Flexible work arrangements should be encouraged at a systemic level. Parental leave policies must evolve to include fathers, enabling shared responsibility in caregiving. Childcare should be treated as essential infrastructure, ensuring that working parents are supported rather than stretched. Equally important is protecting personal time. The idea that employees should be constantly available needs to be re-examined. Without clear boundaries, family time becomes the first casualty of professional demands.

Measuring What Truly Matters: India closely tracks economic indicators such as growth and employment. But it does not measure how families are actually living. Introducing a "Family Well-being Index" could change that. By assessing factors like time spent together, stress levels, and work-life balance, policymakers can better understand the real impact of economic structures on daily life. What gets measured gets attention—and eventually, action.

Redefining Progress: This is not about reducing ambition or slowing down growth. It is about making progress more meaningful and sustainable. A nation's strength is not defined only by its economy, but by the stability and well-being of its families. When homes are emotionally secure, societies become more resilient, productive, and cohesive.

The Question for Leadership: If happiness is truly a priority for leadership, then family well-being must be placed at the centre of policy thinking—not treated as an afterthought. Because a country cannot be emotionally strong if its homes are emotionally exhausted.

The Final Thought: India's future will not be shaped only in boardrooms or policy offices. It will be shaped inside homes in conversations, relationships, and daily interactions. Today, many homes are efficient, organized, and functioning. But they are also tired. The real challenge is not just to build a successful nation. It is to build one where people have the time and space to truly live.

"Village name boards disappear, venture boards appear instead"

(Capital Information)

Sangareddy : Especially in the Narayankhed Assembly Constituency, Sundays have become a hotspot for vehicles flocking in like vultures. In these ventures, plots are registered in the name of "guntta" land divisions. After selling all the plots, even the land reserved for roads is sold off in acres to others.

Eventually, the old venture disappears, the boards are changed, and the same land reappears under new venture names. Ventures are being promoted in the name of "Aravind," but in reality, there is very little to show on the ground. Several ventures under this name are spread across Narayankhed and Nagalgidda Mandal. Buyers are being brought from Hyderabad in large groups and allegedly cheated. They promise one thing and deliver another, constantly using new tactics and misleading claims.

Many ventures that were previously advertised now have nothing at the site except the signboards, which itself shows the extent of the alleged fraud. Farmers face difficulties and delays when they go for land registrations, but venture owners reportedly get registrations done quickly and smoothly.

People are questioning why officials appear to be supporting these venture managements despite so many complaints and alleged scams. Just by looking at these venture boards, one can understand how poorly they are being maintained.

Before selling, however, they conduct aggressive promotions in Hyderabad, distributing colorful pamphlets claiming proximity to Karnataka, Telangana, and the Manjeera River, luring innocent people into buying plots.

Once the sales are completed, nothing remains at the site. Locals are now demanding that authorities respond immediately and take strict action against these ventures.

Centre Discriminating Against Telangana, Says Government Whip and MLA Yennam Srinivas Reddy

Questions BJP Over Lack of Funds, Projects and Support for Telangana Development

(Capital Information)
MAHABUBNAGAR : Government Whip and MLA Yennam Srinivas Reddy launched a sharp attack on the Central Government and the Bharatiya Janata Party, accusing them of neglecting Telangana and adopting a discriminatory attitude towards the state. He questioned BJP leaders to explain what additional benefits Telangana received despite Prime Minister Narendra Modi visiting the state several times after the formation of Telangana. He asked BJP MPs and Union Ministers to reveal the special projects and additional funds they had brought to the state.

According to him, the Centre has been treating Telangana with step-motherly affection since the beginning and has continuously ignored the state's development needs. Yennam Srinivas Reddy said the Prime Minister had promised national project status for the Palamuru region, but the assurance has not been fulfilled till date. At the same time, he alleged that the Centre was releasing huge funds for the Polavaram Project in Andhra Pradesh and ensuring speedy completion of the works, while Telangana projects were being neglected. Questioning the reasons behind such discrimination, he alleged that the BJP-led Central Government was functioning in a manner that benefited large corporate businessmen from Gujarat. He claimed that the Centre was working only for the interests of corporate giants like Adani and Ambani.

He further alleged that the Centre was creating several obstacles for the expansion of the Hyderabad Metro Rail project, forcing the state government to take independent initiative to move the expansion works forward. Criticising BJP supporters, Srinivas Reddy remarked that some leaders were treating Prime Minister Modi with blind devotion while ignoring the real issues faced by the public.

He accused Telangana BJP MPs of limiting themselves to criticising the state government instead of fighting for the rights and interests of Telangana people. He alleged that while the Centre was allocating massive funds to northern states, Telangana's development was being completely ignored. He also accused the Centre of creating hurdles in the completion of the Palamuru-Rangareddy Lift Irrigation Project. Referring to earlier remarks on the Kaleshwaram Project, Srinivas Reddy said Prime Minister Modi had once described it as an "ATM" and alleged corruption, but no action had been taken so far. He pointed out that despite several years passing, not a single case had been registered against the former Chief Minister's family. Claiming that the relationship between the Bharat Rashtra Samithi and the BJP appeared stronger than "Fevicol," he alleged political understanding between the two parties.

Highlighting welfare initiatives of the state government, he said free bus travel for women had significantly contributed to women empowerment. He also stated that several students were now moving towards higher education due to measures introduced by the state government. Yennam Srinivas Reddy criticised the Centre for spending thousands of crores on bullet train projects while failing to provide adequate funds for government schools and the education sector. He alleged that proposals sent by the Telangana Government for the expansion of residential schools had not received approvals from the Centre.

He further stated that the BJP Government at the Centre was prioritising selfish politics over national interest. While the Centre was acting swiftly for the development of Amaravati, it was showing negligence towards the growth and expansion of Hyderabad, he alleged.

Concluding his remarks, Srinivas Reddy said BJP MPs elected from Telangana had become merely ornamental leaders and were failing to fight for the rights, interests and development of Telangana people.

From Somnath to Sindoor, The spirit of a resurgent India : Piyush Goyal

New Delhi : The reconstruction and consecration of the magnificent Somnath Temple 75 years ago marked a defining moment in the resurgence of India's civilisational glory and reaffirmed its resilience and determination, which are at the core of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's Viksit Bharat 2047 mission.

The 75th anniversary of this sacred milestone gives the nation supreme confidence in the strong foundation and strength of the Indian civilization that emerged stronger after withstanding a series of vicious attacks on the temple by fanatics for 1,000 years.

After every attack, the temple on the serene seashore of Gujarat rose from the ruins in all its splendour. In many ways, its history mirrors the country's past, in which our peace-loving people bounced back after brutal attacks on their belief systems, culture and heritage.

As PM Modi said, just as there were repeated attempts and conspiracies to destroy Somnath, foreign invaders tried for centuries to annihilate India. Yet neither the revered shrine, nor the country was destroyed.

The PM made it clear that the motive of the attacks on Somnath was more sinister than looting. "If the attacks were only for loot, they would have stopped after the first great plunder a thousand years ago. But that was not the case. The sacred idol of Somnath was desecrated, the temple's form was repeatedly altered. And we were taught that Somnath was destroyed only for loot. The cruel history of hatred, oppression, and terror was hidden from us," he said.

Nehru's Resistance - After independence, Sardar Patel led the mission of reconstruction of Somnath, which was one of the earliest expressions of national self-confidence in a newly free India. But even this faced hurdles.

India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru formally opposed the then President Dr Rajendra Prasad's decision to attend the historic inauguration. But the President inaugurated the temple on May 11, 1951.

The reconstruction sowed the seeds of India's cultural renaissance and pride in the civilization after centuries of ruthless oppression. From the rejuvenation of Kashi Vishwanath and Mahakaleshwar temple in Ujjain to the grand Ram Mandir in Ayodhya; from the revival of Kedarnath to the preservation of countless heritage sites, India is reclaiming its civilisational narrative with dignity and purpose. These efforts are increasing the number of visitors and creating numerous jobs and business opportunities for local people.

Global footprint - Like Somnath, India has emerged stronger. It is making global waves both as the world's fastest growing major economy and as a country that uniquely blends modernity with its rich heritage. In 2014, after the country emphatically voted the Modi government to power, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution endorsing by a record 175 countries to observe the International Yoga Day. Yoga is now a global wellness movement that has benefitted people of all cultures across the world.

A decade later, PM Modi inaugurated a grand temple in the Middle east on land gifted by the government of the United Arab Emirates. Earlier, the PM launched the renovation of a 200-year old temple in Bahrain. He also regularly interacts with Indian diaspora, making them proud ambassadors of Indian cultural heritage.

Globalising Ayush & Yoga - Promoting India's cultural heritage and creating global opportunities for professionals of our traditional knowledge systems has been a key element in the series of Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) India has signed with developed countries in recent years. Apart from creating lucrative global opportunities for our artisans, workers, farmers, fishermen, small businesses and startups, these trade pacts carry forward the PM's vision of vikas bhi, Vivasat bhi (development as well as heritage).

The recently concluded FTA with New Zealand is a significant milestone in India's global outreach in traditional medicine and holistic healthcare. It provides for visa quotas to enable Ayush practitioners and Yoga instructors, along with other Indian cultural and knowledge professionals, to work in New Zealand.

The FTA formally creates an enabling environment for trade in Ayurveda, yoga, and other traditional medicine services and positions Ayush as a contemporary, globally relevant healthcare solution.

Trade pacts with UK, EU and Australia have similar provisions. The FTA with the European Union will allow Ayush practitioners to provide their services using professional qualifications they gain in India. It also facilitates establishment of Ayush wellness centres and clinics in the EU Member States.

Vanquishing New Threats - While India's cultural heritage is attracting global attention, the country remains the target of fanatics, who are using terrorism and infiltration to disturb India's harmonious heritage.

The New India under the leadership of PM Modi responds powerfully to such threats. With Operation Sindoor, India taught a lesson to terrorists and their sponsors across the border. And in recent assembly elections, voters in West Bengal rejected parties that were supporting infiltrators, practicing vote-bank politics and undermining India's cultural heritage. Significantly, the anniversaries of Operation Sindoor and the reconstruction of the Somnath Temple are just a few days apart. Both highlight India's resilience and strength.

The story of Somnath ultimately transcends politics. It is the story of a civilisation that refused to surrender. Seventy-five years after its reconstruction, Somnath stands not merely as a temple, but as a timeless symbol of India's resilience, continuity and national confidence.

Ancient Shiva Temple Allegedly Demolished for School Construction in Narsampet

(Capital Information)

Narsampet : Tension prevailed in parts of Narsampet constituency after allegations surfaced over the demolition of an 800-year-old mud fort Shiva temple, reportedly to facilitate the construction of an integrated school.

Addressing a press conference at Khanapur mandal headquarters, former MPP Vemulapalli Prakash Rao and mandal party president Mahalakshmi Venkata Narsaiah accused local authorities and political representatives of deliberately destroying the historic temple under the pretext of educational development.

They alleged that tenders were floated in the names of benami contractors linked to the local MLA and questioned whether the demolition was carried out in search of hidden treasures. The leaders demanded that officials clarify the circumstances under which the temple was razed overnight.

The speakers further stated that the Archaeology Department had previously identified the site as historically significant during the earlier government's tenure when plans for a Sainik School were initiated. They questioned how such a heritage structure could be ignored by the present administration.

Despite the availability of alternative government land for the school, the selection of a site housing a historic temple raises serious concerns, they said, alleging a "100 per cent conspiracy" behind the decision.

They also criticized district authorities, including the Collector and RDO, for alleged inaction and delay in both protecting the temple and proceeding with the school project. The leaders demanded an immediate inquiry into the incident and strict action against those responsible.

Alleging possible illegal excavation for hidden valuables, they claimed that the silence of officials has only deepened public suspicion. They urged the government to respond on why no investigation has been initiated so far despite complaints reportedly submitted by the Archaeology Department.

Several local leaders, including Khanapur Sarpanch Dasari Ramesh, Society Vice-Chairman Devineni Venu Krishna, and others, were present at the meeting.

Mulugu Farmers Face Hardships as Procurement Delays Continue : Telangana Rythu Sangham

(Capital information)

Mulugu, May 10 : Telangana Rythu Sangham Mulugu district president M.D. Gaffoor Pasha alleged that government paddy procurement centres in the district were functioning only in name, while farmers continued to face severe difficulties due to delays in procurement and transportation. A team of the farmers' association on Saturday inspected procurement centres in Kannayigudem, Kasimdevipeta, Rayinigudem, Sarvapurm and Ankanagudem villages of Mulugu mandal. Speaking on the occasion, Gaffoor Pasha said farmers had been waiting for nearly a month for their produce to be weighed and procured, causing immense distress. He said untimely rains during the previous night had further worsened the situation, with heaps of paddy and maize lying exposed in market yards and fields. Farmers were spending sleepless nights trying to protect their produce from rain damage, he added. Stating that selling crops had become more difficult than cultivating them, Gaffoor Pasha alleged that rice millers were exploiting farmers in the name of quality checks and deductions, reducing five to ten kilograms per quintal as "tarugu" during procurement. He also alleged that after procurement, several farmers were not being issued proper receipts by procurement centre operators. He pointed out that due to shortage of gunny bags and non-availability of lorries, only farmers owning tractors were able to transport their produce to rice mills, while small and marginal farmers were being forced to spend additional money on transportation. The farmers' leader further said procurement centres lacked even basic facilities, including protective tarpaulins to safeguard paddy from unexpected rains. He criticised both the Central and State governments, alleging that anti-farmer policies were pushing farmers into distress. The association demanded that the government immediately speed up procurement of paddy and maize, ensure that no illegal deductions were made, provide receipts to farmers immediately after procurement, and initiate action against rice mills allegedly involved in exploitation. He warned that if the issues were not resolved immediately, the organisation would mobilise farmers and launch protest programmes. Public organisation leaders Ratnam Praveen, Korra Raju, Gundeboyina Ravi Goud, Kondal Rao, Bukya Roop Singh, Kukkala Poshalu, Taviti Narayana, Sammayya and farmers Cherukula Srilatha, M.D. Rahimunnisa, Lakshmakka, Sambayya, Ramesh and others participated in the programme.

Action to Awareness: The Hidden Wisdom of Simple Tasks

In an age where spiritual growth is often associated with complex philosophies, meditation techniques, and the pursuit of enlightenment, a simple yet profound teaching offers a refreshing perspective. A student once approached a master with a question that echoes in the minds of many seekers: How can I purify my mind? The master did not respond with elaborate instructions or mystical concepts. Instead, he pointed to something ordinary and immediate. "First clean the room you are sitting in," he said. At first glance, the answer may seem unrelated, even dismissive. But beneath its simplicity lies a powerful truth. Many of us seek inner clarity while living amidst outer disorder. We aspire to space we occupy, and of the life unfolding directly in front of us. Cleaning a room is not merely a physical act. It is an exercise in attention, discipline, and presence. Each object we put in place reflects a subtle ordering of the mind. Each deliberate movement cultivates mindfulness. In this way, action itself becomes a form of meditation. When our external environment becomes orderly, it often mirrors and supports an inner sense of calm. The restless mind, constantly distracted by clutter and unfinished tasks, begins to settle. Clarity emerges not from forcefully controlling thoughts, but from engaging consciously with what is immediately at hand.

This teaching gently challenges a common tendency: the urge to seek higher truths while overlooking basic responsibilities. It invites a radical yet practical question: Are we truly aware of the life directly in front of us? Spiritual growth does not always require withdrawal from the world or immersion in complex practices. Sometimes, it begins with the simplest of acts picking up a broom, arranging a desk, or completing a neglected task with full attention. In doing so, we discover that the path to purified mind may not start in the mind at all. It begins in the small, conscious actions of everyday life. And perhaps, in that quiet act of cleaning, we find not just order but understanding. God bless all of us. - ARPAN.
